

A Friendship That Shows What Care Is Really About

At Agincare, we believe care and support are about so much more than the day-to-day. It is about building relationships, creating opportunities and helping people live the life they choose.

Just ask Zack and Shaun.

Zack is a Support Worker at Red Oak Court in Wareham, where he has been part of the team for five years. During that time, he and Shaun have developed a truly special relationship, one that Shaun describes simply: "Zack is my best friend."

Shaun has Down syndrome and learning disabilities, and when he first began his journey with the service, he needed considerably more support. Today, he has grown in confidence and independence, achieving things that once seemed a long way away.

A huge part of that journey has been the relationship he has built with Zack.

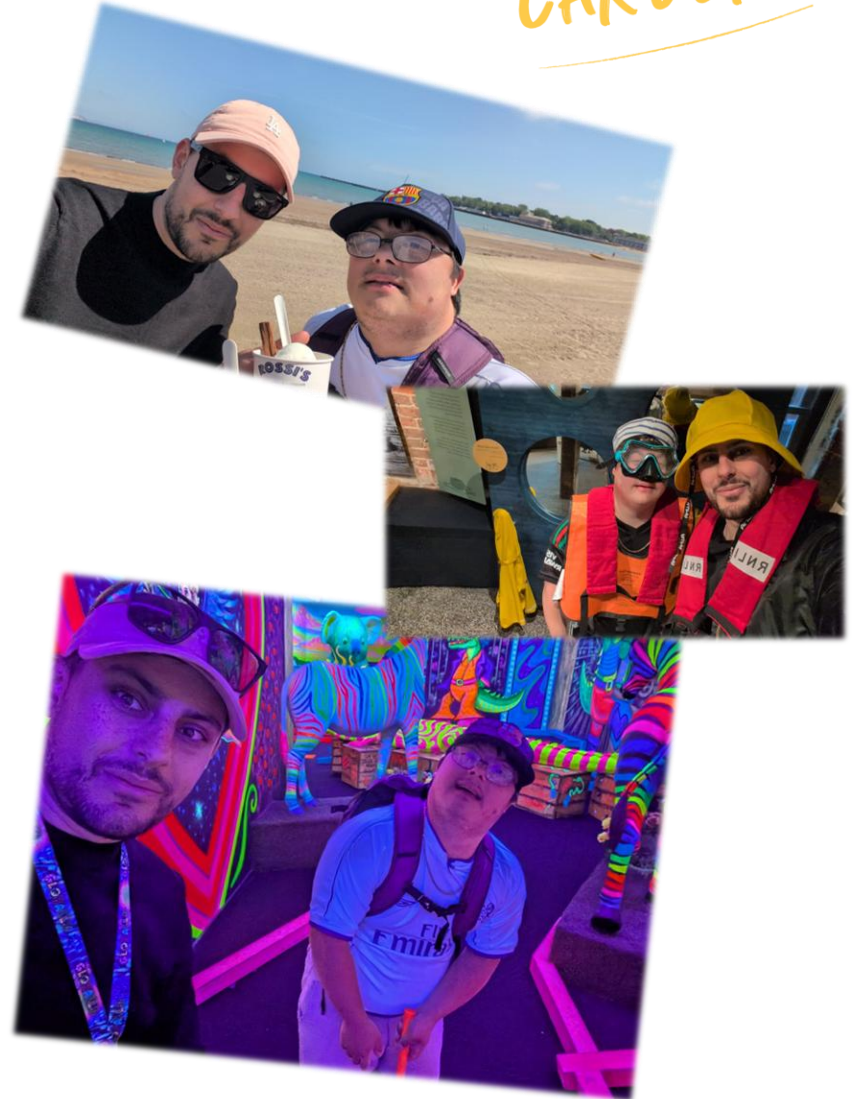

The pair enjoy plenty of adventures together, from day trips and visits to the local pub to supporting Shaun's favourite football team, AFC Bournemouth – the Cherries!

But it is not just the places they go or the things they do that make their relationship so special. It is the trust, understanding and friendship they have developed along the way.

Zack also brings his own experiences to his role.

Having mild autism and ADHD himself, he understands that everyone is different and that people can have their own triggers, challenges and ways of communicating. His personal experience helps him relate to the people he supports and understand them as individuals.

Over five years with Agincare, Zack has grown alongside the organisation, developing his skills and experience while helping Shaun and others develop his own confidence and independence.

And that is what makes a career in care and support so rewarding.

The bonds created between Support Workers and the people they support can be genuinely life changing. They can become friendships built on trust, shared experiences, laughter and countless memories.

At Agincare, we want to help you build those relationships too.
